

School of Humanities, Arts and Cultural Studies
presents

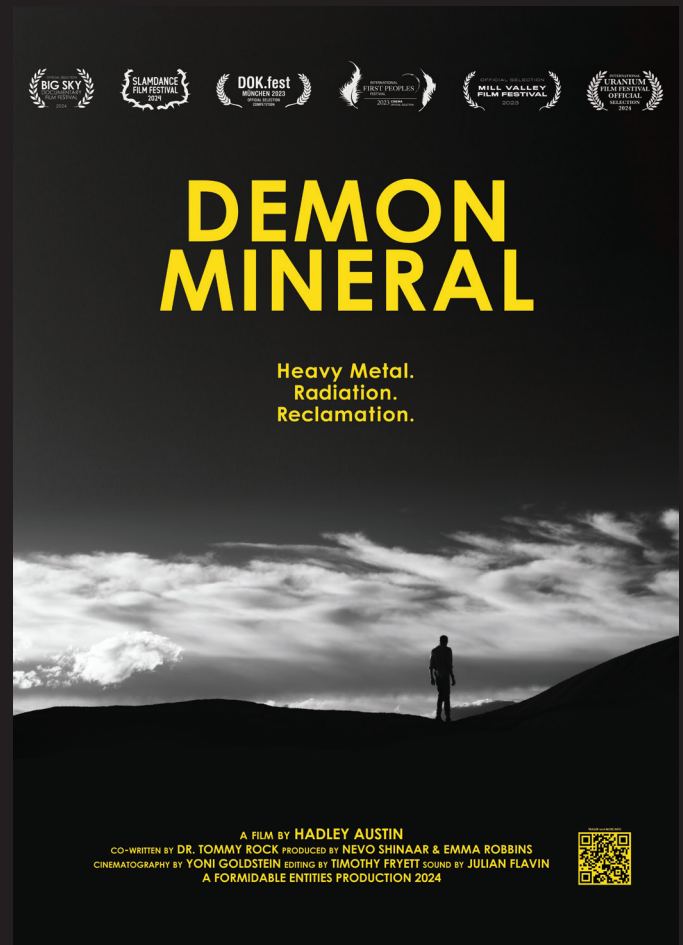

West Valley Film Series

Provocative Cinema for Viewing and Discussion

Our third film in the series is part of the campus Native American Heritage Month celebration:

Demon Mineral

This film can be considered an “anti-Western,” flipping the classic cinematic paradigm by centering the voices and experiences of the Dine community to explore the legacy of uranium mining in Dine Bikeyah, the sacred homelands of the Navajo, where over 500 unremediated mines are scattered across an area the size of West Virginia. This documentary celebrates the actions of the Dine community to fight against new mines and improve life in an irradiated ecosystem.

A brief discussion will be led after the film by ASU’s Labriola National Indian Data Center

Wed, Nov 6
@ 7:00 p. m.

ADMISSION FREE!

CLCC Lecture Hall
(far east side of the West Valley campus)

artspacewest@asu.edu

